

Dental Veneers

In the domain of dentistry, a veneer is a layer of material placed over a tooth, either to improve its aesthetics, or protect the tooth's surface from damage. There are two main types of materials used to manufacture a veneer: composite and dental porcelain.

A composite veneer may be directly placed (built-up in the mouth), or indirectly fabricated by a dental technician in a laboratory, and later bonded to the tooth.

In contrast, porcelain veneers can only be created in a laboratory before being fused to the tooth.

Additional, although less common, types of veneers also include full veneer crowns, as well as laminate veneers. While a full veneer crown is a restoration that covers all coronal tooth surfaces, and re-establishes the tooth's functionality, a laminate veneer consists of a thin layer that covers only the tooth's surface, and is generally used solely for aesthetic purposes.

What Types of Problems do Dental Veneers Fix?

Veneers are routinely used to fix:

- Teeth that are discoloured, either because of a root canal treatment, stains from tetracycline /or other drugs, excessive fluoride, the presence of large resin fillings, as well as a large range of other causes.
- Teeth that are worn down
- Teeth that are chipped or broken
- Teeth that are misaligned, uneven or irregularly shaped, such as having craters or bulges in them
- Teeth with gaps between them (to close the space between these teeth)

What are the Advantages of Dental Veneers?

Veneers offer the following advantages:

- They provide a natural tooth appearance

- Gum tissue tolerates porcelain well
- Porcelain veneers are stain resistant
- The colour of a porcelain veneer can be selected to make dark teeth appear whiter.
- Veneers offer a conservative approach to changing a tooth's colour and shape; veneers generally don't require the extensive shaping prior to the procedure that crowns do; yet offering a stronger more aesthetic alternative.

Do Dental Veneers Require Special Care?

Dental veneers do not require any special care as long as you continue to follow good oral hygiene practices including brushing and flossing as you normally would. Even though porcelain veneers resist stains, your dentist may recommend that you avoid stain causing foods and beverages (coffee, tea, red wine and etc.).
