

Yes, You Need a Teeth Cleaning Every 6 Months

The poking, the prodding: it's no wonder many children hate going to the dentist.

It can be a scary place. Plus, what if the child has a cavity? That would be really bad.

As a parent, you should encourage your child to see a dentist. However, you may let your imagination get the best of you, enough so that you both put off even a routine teeth cleaning.

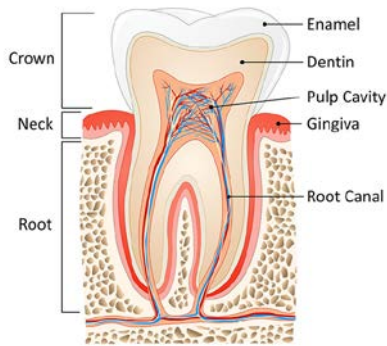

After all, you make sure your child brushes their teeth and flosses every day and night. You don't see anything weird in their mouth. Nothing hurts.

Your child is in the clear, right? They don't have to see a dentist.

Actually, they do. The Canadian Dental Association suggests regular teeth cleaning in six-month intervals.

Root Canals

A root canal (RCT), or endodontic, treatment is the proper term for a procedure that treats the nerve of the tooth, and is a treatment that is carried out on the pulp of a tooth that is either inflamed, infected, or dead.

10. And the Biggest Reason to Get a Teeth Cleaning...to Catch Cancer (and Other Diseases) Early

Takeaways

Your oral health is as important as your physical and mental health.

Just like you wouldn't try to make your own cast if you broke your foot, you shouldn't try to care for your oral health exclusively at home.

If you haven't had a teeth cleaning lately, it's time to schedule an appointment. You should be seeing your dentist for these cleanings on a six-month basis. By doing so, you're preventing gum disease and possibly even oral cancer.

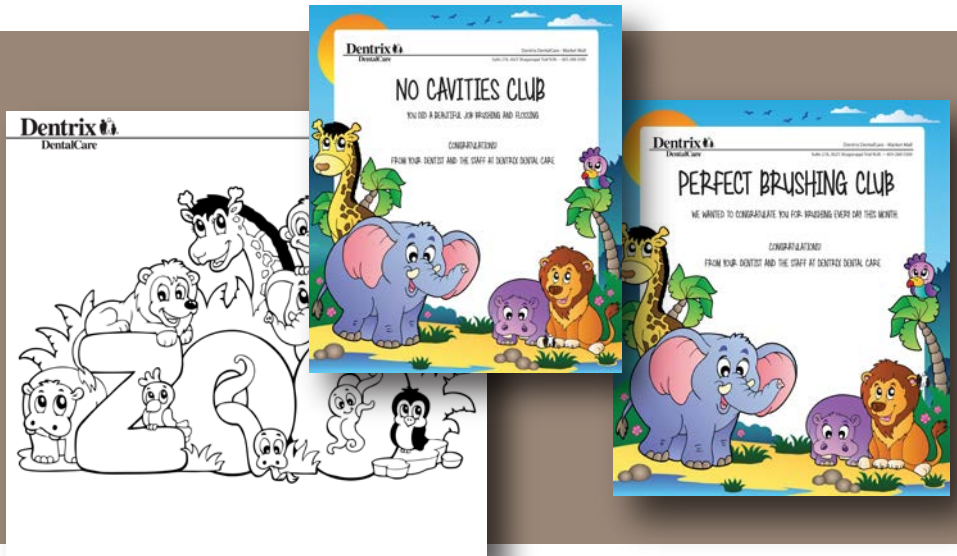

Although the dentist can be a scary place, as a parent, you have to be a role model for your children. That means facing your fears and taking your family to the dentist.
